

Unmonitored access to the internet has become a grand issue among young children, thus a surefire method to assure their online safety must be developed. From child-inappropriate material that can be deemed as extremely harmful to their safety and well-being, to lack of knowledge on general internet safety, machines should allow for ways to account for these issues in the event of a child being the main operator of said machine.